Messrs. F. S. Wartman, Chas. Anderson and Rev. Mr. Butler, a former resident of the county, all gave spirited addresses.

THE CAMPAIGN.

strongly advocated by the temperance

We have visited the county gaol of the county and find five persons confined therein. We also find the gaol in a neat and orderly condition. We find the walk from the Court House leading to the gaol in a very bad condition and would recommend a new cement walk in its stead. We desire to thank your honor for the clear and comprehensive address delivered to us at the opening of the court which enabled us to discharge the duties devolving upon us without any difficulty. Finally we desire to congratulate your Honor upon your elevation to the bench and hope you may long be spared to fill the honorable position.

Signed on behalf of the Grand Jurors.

PUBLIC IS ROUSED.

"Let Them Die" Is Attitude Towards Hunger Strikers.

LONDON, June 9. — "Let them die!" is becoming a rather popular slogan in connection with the "hunger striking" suffragettes, since the public has become so profoundly resentful of the actions of the militant women.

It is reported to-day that the Government had decided to take a step in this direction by introducing legislation to indemnify the prison authorities against the consequences of allowing suffragettes to starve themselves to death while in prison.

The Evening Standard yesterday interviewed a number of prominent people including clergymen, on the subject, and all of the latter who are quoted by the newspaper, express themselves in favor of the proposal.

Father Bernard Vaughan, brother of the late Cardinal Vaughan, replied "There would be nothing ethically wrong in letting them die. Let them start at once and make up for lost time."

Rev. Arthur Waldron, vicar of St. Matthew's, Brixton, said "If the women refuse food they should be allowed to die."

Rev. Richard Free vicar of St. Clement's, Fulham, replied: "I think the suggestion very good. I have advocated it for many months."

Several of those interviewed denounced impartially both forcible feeding and the "hunger strike," while Willoughby Dickinson, a Liberal member of Parliament; Lady Cowdray and Lady Mui-Mackenzie dismissed the suggestion as preposterous.

PARIS, June 9.—Senator Alder Felix Ribot last night accepted President Poincaré's invitation to form a Ministry. He has already obtained promises of adhesion from Leon Bourgeois for the Foreign Office, Theophile Delcassé for the Department of Marine, and Jean d'Espey for public works, and hopes to be able to present a complete list of a new Cabinet before to-night.

M. Ribot is in his 73rd year, has held various positions in previous Cabinets, as well as the Premiership.

Doubts, however, persist in certain circles of his ultimate success, and these are strengthened by the disguised opposition of the radical, who have called a meeting to-day, at which it is stated that the motion affirming the plainness of the party's hostility to a Ministry by M. Ribot, will be proposed.

One of the burning questions of the day is that relating to the military service, and if the Cabinet adheres to this measure, it will have to face a strong Socialist opposition in the Chamber of Deputies.

WOODSTOCK, June 9.—By the off his coat, tying it to a gun, and lighting matches, and saving, Edward Dutton of this town succeeded in stopping a C.P.R. freight train and thereby preventing it being wrecked through running into a section where the tracks had washed away by the rains about 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

Dutton was returning from a long trip, and he came across a washout at Pine Pond, 12 miles of Woodstock. He and several companions began to hurry to a place where a warning might be given to the railway officials, but they proceeded only 200 yards when they saw a freight train coming through along. After it was stopped, the crew had examined the condition of the roadbed, it backed up to Woodstock, and the auxiliary was sent to make the repairs.

Party Lines Are Broken In Unexpected Move on Part of Upper Chamber—Eleven Conservatives and Twenty-One Liberals Support Senator Power's Motion—Liberals Also Split on Measure.

OTTAWA, June 9. — The bill to reimburse the depositors in the defunct Farmers' Bank was defeated in the Senate last evening by 32 to 17. The defeat of the measure was unexpected, but it was anticipated that the division would be on party lines. The vote of the Conservatives was evenly divided for and against the motion, while fourteen liberals vote to give the bill a six months' hoist.

The following was the division: Conservatives, for six months' hoist, moved by Senator Power—Leduc, McKeen, Daniels, McKay, Ross (Middleton), Corby, Murphy, Riviere, Curry, Sir Mackenzie Bowden and Monplaisir—11.

Liberals, for six months' hoist—Laurie, Fliset, Legris, Thibodeau, Drouin, Kerr, Dandurand, Power, Simpson, Forget, Jaffray, Tessier, Che, Farrell, Dessaulles, Cholette, Yeo, Belth, Gillmer, Cloran and Lavergne—21.

Liberals against—Mitchell, Divet, Hugh, Domville, Casgrain, Bosk, Derbyshire, Deveber, Young, Atkinson, Ross (Moose Jaw), Ratz, Yer and Talbot—14.

The two party leaders, Messrs. Lougheed and Bostock, both voted the bill, while Sir Mackenzie Bowden the old Conservative Premier, voted against.

Several Liberal Senators alleged that the purpose of the bill was merely to fulfill election promises and to cloak the character of the former Finance Minister, Hon. W. S. Field.

Senator Bostock declared that notwithstanding the information which he said to have reached Mr. Henson of Halifax, that member had taken the trouble to go across the floor of the House and tell Mr. Field.

Practically the whole of the afternoon's sitting of the Commons was taken up with a discussion of the bill service between Canada and Great Britain, with the rivalry between St John and Halifax as mail routes forced to the front by Maritime Province members. On the Liberal side the existing service came in for considerable criticism, while Hon. P. Pelletier and other Government members cited improvements since the last Ministry took office.

Storm Plays Havoc With Fishing Fleet Of New Brunswick.

At Least Forty Small Craft Are Reported to Have Gone Down In Gale and Loss of Life Is Believed to Be the Worst In History of Shipping on the North Shore—Five Funerals Thus Far.

ST. JOHN, N.B., June 9.—During a severe storm on Friday night the fleet of fishing vessels on the shore of the province was badly crippled, and reports vary concerning the number which have been lost, though it is definitely known that nine have been drowned, eight from Caraquet, N.B., and one from St. Simone.

The reports which reached the city only yesterday said that at least forty small fishing vessels had gone down in the storm which raged along the coast. Some of the crews of one or the other of the smacks were rescued by the more sturdy vessels of the little fleet, but it was impossible, owing to their being so widely scattered, to save all. No less than five bodies were buried yesterday morning at Caraquet, and many homes have been bereaved by the disaster, which is one of the worst in the shipping history of the north shore.

The latest word with regard to loss in the storm on Friday on the north shore was to the effect that two vessels had gone down and a third was missing. Nine men were drowned, and the crew of the missing schooner have not been heard from. Eight of the men were from Caraquet and one from St. Simone, while each of the vessels was from the former place.

On board each of the schooners a father and two sons went to a watery grave. Joseph Cariault was the master of one of the little vessels and his two sons, John and Arthur, sailed with him. All three were drowned and a neighbor named Dugas also. The master of the other schooner was R. S. Albert and his two sons, Laro and John, were member of his crew as were his father and another man, Oliver Paulin.

He was educated in Montreal, and in this city, entering the newspaper business as a journeyman printer. He was honored by Ottawa University with the degree of LL.D. in 1907, and was called to the Senate by Lord Minto, in 1903. CLASH ON CHURCH UNION.

Debate Occurs In Assembly Over Majority Report.

WOODSTOCK, June 9. — The expected clash between church unionists and anti-unionists took place at yesterday's session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. W. T. Clark of Westmount, Que., who presented the report for the committee, and Rev. Dr. D. D. McLeod, of Barrie, represented the opposing forces.

The minority report will be presented by Dr. Scott of Montreal today, along with an overture signed by 82 commissioners.

Both the minority report and the overture ask that negotiations with the Methodists and Congregationalists be shelved for some years.

Dr. Clark, in opening the discussion, said the amendments offered were the result of a large number of suggestions the committee had received from time to time. He also called the attention of the assembly to the change of opinion going on in their ranks. "At least six members of the committee who, when they joined, were strictly opposed to church union have now come to think the same as I," he said.

Dr. McLeod took exception to several of Dr. Clark's statements and gave a vigorous address in support of the minority report. He asked the assembly to banish from their minds the opinion that the members of the minority are narrow-minded. "They

GOVERNMENT FORCES WIN.

Albanian Rebels Are Put to Rout by Prince William's Troops.

VIENNA, Austria, June 9.—Albanian Government troops yesterday completely routed a force of 5,000 insurgents in the vicinity of Tirana, to the east of Durazzo, according to a despatch from the Albanian capital. The insurgents after a victory over the Government troops had threatened to advance on the capital.

Although the insurgents declare themselves ready to submit to most of the demands of the international commission in regard to the future of Albania they steadfastly refuse to recognize Prince William of Wied as their ruler and demand the nomination of a Moslem prince. Most of them favor Essad Pasha, former Minister of War, who was recently deported and went to Italy.

Divers Will Release Victims From Wreck of Empress.

RIMOUSKI, June 9.—The first step towards recovering the 800, or more bodies lying imprisoned in the wrecked Empress of Ireland, was taken Sunday afternoon when a diver descended from the Canadian Government lighthouse tender Druid and for upwards of an hour investigated the accessible parts of the sunken liner. The Empress was found to be lying on her side in about 180 feet of water.

On board the Druid, besides several Government officials, were Capt. Walsh, marine superintendent of the C.P.R., and George Weatherspoon, wrecking expert, who has been engaged by the railway company to undertake the task of bringing the remainder of the victims of the disaster to the surface, several divers and embalmers. The last-named will carry out the work of preparing the bodies for burial immediately they are recovered.

U. S. ENVOYS OFFER PLAN.

They Propose a New Provisional Government For Mexico.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 9.—The United States Government, through Justice Lamar and Fred W. Lehmann, yesterday presented to the three South American mediators a complete plan for the pacification of Mexico.

It is the same in principle as that presented by the mediators and already agreed to by the Huerta Government. It contemplates the establishment at the earliest date practicable of a new provisional Government in Mexico City, which would conduct general elections for a permanent Government.

The plan written by the American delegates, after consultation with the Washington Government, is brief, and includes several counter propositions of which the Huerta delegates will be advised to-day. From the mediators themselves it became known that the differences in the two plans are slight. A full conference of all delegates and mediators is planned for to-day or to-morrow. This is for the formal consideration and final drafting of the protocol.

The announcement that General Huerta had decided not to blockade Tampico against arms for the Constitutionalists relieved all fear of a breakdown in the negotiations.

To Investigate Wireless.

LONDON, June 9.—A state organization to study, in the public interests, the science of wireless telegraphy, ordinary telegraphy and telephony is proposed by the Postmaster-General's committee of experts, whose report was issued last night. The committee suggests the establishment of a national research laboratory and a national committee of research to conduct theoretical investigations and experiments, and to co-ordinate and supplement the work now being done by Government Departments.

He was connected with the Georgia State College of Agriculture. Prof. Hart was shot under mysterious circumstances by J. R. Thompson, a fisherman. The latter claims that he shot in self-defence, but three witnesses swore that Hart had no revolver.

A great friend of mine was for considerable time the medical superintendent of a lunatic asylum at Glasgow.

One night in making his custom- rounds he had occasion to visit patients in the kitchen, who were preparing the dinner. There were seven of them, all big, sturdy fellows, who were believed to be harmless. The keeper only looked in on them now and again, feeling that his constant presence was unnecessary.

The doctor unlocked the iron door of the kitchen and went among the lunatics.

There were five large boilers containing scalding water ready for cooking the day's dinner for the patients.

One of the lunatics pointed at the boilers full of hot water and, holding his hand upon the doctor's shoulder, said, "Doctor, you'll make me pot of broth." And the words no sooner been uttered than the other six madmen shouted in a chorus of delight, "That's the thing!"

LINCOLN'S STATEROOM.

The President Thought He Had Shrank in Size Overnight.

In "The Everyday Life of Abraham Lincoln" Mr. F. F. Browne includes an amusing anecdote told by Admiral Porter about the president's short visit to the front in the latter part of March, 1865. Mr. Lincoln had changed his quarters from the River Queen to the Malvern. Admiral Porter's flagship, which was then lying in the James river, near City Point. Admiral Porter says:

The Malvern was a small vessel with very poor cabin accommodations and was not at all fitted to receive high personages. She was a captured blockade runner. I offered the president my bed, but he positively declined it and chose to sleep in a small stateroom outside the cabin that my secretary occupied. It was only 6 feet long by 4½ feet wide, a very tiny place to hold the president of the United States, but Mr. Lincoln seemed pleased with it.

When he came to breakfast the next morning I asked how he had slept. "I slept well," he answered, "but you can't put a long sword in a short scabbard. I was too long for that berth." Then I remembered that he

WHEN CARUSO SINGS.

The Scene in His Dressing Room Before the Opera Begins.

The opera was "Aida." Caruso was to sing Rhadames, and he was in the dressing room. In his train came his two valets. Wonderful speed were they. Celerity and deftness raised to the nth power, with silencers on their feet, they passed and repassed each other in inconceivably small spaces without once touching each other or bumping into their lord and master.

Caruso sits before a stationary wash stand, and one of the valets hands him a toothbrush and powder. Then for three solid minutes by his Swiss movement watch does Caruso cleanse and scrub and polish. The ever alert dressers stand behind him, watchful for a shrug of his shoulders, which they immediately interpret into a command.

Caruso takes a long breath, and he needs it. It must be a signal, for one of the valets has a glass of warm water in one hand and in the other a big, round pasteboard box full of little brownish crystals. Caruso takes a handful of the crystals and drops them into the warm water, where they dissolve immediately.

"That's gargling salt," he says. "I use it for my first gargle."

The gargle takes four minutes, and then comes the vaporizer. A glass of water containing bicarbonate of soda and glycerin is placed on a little stand. A rubber hose connected with the vaporizer is put into the glass, and a thin, forceful sputtering spray shoots out a full foot. Into this tiny Gatling gun spray Caruso plunges, mouth open.

Then the heavy artillery answers the little Gatling gun, for Caruso coughs back at the spray, chokes, bellows and sputters. Into each nostril, then deep down into the throat, go the bicarbonate of soda and glycerin over and over and over again until Caruso coughs no more.

The vaporizer bath has taken eight minutes by Caruso's infallible watch, but the end is not yet. There is a cold water gargle—sterilized water, please—minus the salt, to follow and that in turn by a spray for the nose only. Only about six sniffs apiece for each nostril and the spray is put away.

Then menthol and vaseline on absorbent cotton attached to long sticks and Caruso swabs out his throat with these as a gunner would a cannon.

"Dilates the throat," he says between gasps. One more gargle of cold water and the homage to the throat is finished. It has taken twenty-two minutes.

On goes his bathrobe, and he is in the corridor—smoking a cigarette! Twenty-two minutes of hard work he has given to that throat, and now he is calmly smoking a cigarette and inhaling every blessed puff of it. Shades of bicarbonate of soda, of gargling salt, of glycerin and of menthol, of what avail are you when a nervous man wants a cigarette and wants it now?—Charles Bloomingdale, Jr., in Saturday Evening Post.

Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. I will recommend your medicine to my friends and give you permission to publish my testimonial." — Mrs. LAWRENCE MARTIN, 12 King St., Westbrook, Maine.

Manston, Wis. — "At the Change of Life I suffered with pains in my back and loins until I could not stand. I also had night-sweats so that the sheets would be wet. I tried other medicine but got no relief. After taking one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use for six months. The pains left me, the night-sweats and hot flashes grew less, and in one year I was a different woman. I know I have to thank you for my continued good health ever since." — Mrs. M. J. AVERTED THE DUEL.

Valor Vanished With the Choice of Weapons and Conditions.

Representative Borland of Missouri gives an account of the challenge to a duel which occurred in Louisiana, supposedly among the last challenges of that environment in the state. The affair was between a gentleman who belonged to one of the oldest families there and a sturdy blacksmith of Georgia, who had become a man of political influence.

The gentleman took offense at some remarks of the Georgian and sent him a challenge. The powerful blacksmith was nonplussed.

"I know nothing about this dueling business," said he, "and I positively will not fight."

"You must," urged his friend. "No gentleman can refuse."

"I am not a gentleman," replied the honest citizen of Georgia. "I'm only a blacksmith."

"But you will be ruined if you do not fight," continued his friends. "You will have the choice of weapons, and you can choose so as to give yourself an equal chance with your adversary."

"The grant requested time in which to consider the matter and ended by

But it would be better if I took my clothes off." The madmen, with a yell of delight, said "Yes," and the doctor asked them to wait a moment while he took and took his clothes off. But soon as he got out of the kitchen turned the key in the door and ordered the keeper to see to the lunatics being put under restraint. The doctor's presence of mind saved him, it is true, from a terrible death, but he died shortly after raving mad. The experience had deprived him of his reason."

Convict Makes $5,000 a Year.
Pere la Capinette murdered a man in a jealous passion a quarter of a century ago in Paris and was sent to Caledonia. A commission was recently sent out to inspect the convict and inquire into the Government lands that are allotted to convicts who are released for good conduct. They found Pere la Capinette, white-haired, benevolent, and venerable with his seventy years, surrounded by his sons, whom he had brought from France. He showed the commissioners over the coffee plantation on which he had settled since his release. "I am making $5,000 a year now," he explained, and he added, with a sigh, "if only I had committed my murder twenty years earlier I should have been a millionaire by now."

Without Horns.
A clergyman was an important person in a horse dealing case. He gave a somewhat confused account of the transaction in dispute, and a cross-examining counsel, after making several blustering but ineffective attempts to obtain a more satisfactory statement, said: "Pray, sir, do you know the difference between a horse and a cow?" "I acknowledge my ignorance," replied the reverend gentleman. "I fully know the difference between a horse and a cow or between a bull and a bully—only a bully, I am told, has horns, and a bully—here he is—a respectful bow to the advocate—'luckily for me, has none.'"

Gastronomic Clock.
An ingenious Frenchman once devised a clock that would tell him the time in the dark, not through his eyes through his mouth. Beside his bed he placed a large flat clock dial which every hour was marked by a small cavity. In each of these he placed a different spice; the figure 12, instance, held quinine and the figure 6 cloves. To find the time he felt the short hand with his fingers. It gave him the hour. To get the minutes he felt for the long hand and tasted the spice to which it pointed. For instance, he knew it was half-past six.

Then I remembered that he was over six feet four inches and that the berth was only six feet! That day while we were away from the ship all the carpenters were put to work. They took down the stateroom partitions and enlarged the room to eight feet by six and a half feet. A mattress four feet wide was put in the new berth.

Nothing was said to the president about the change in his quarters, but the next morning he came out of the room smiling and said, "A miracle happened last night. I shrank six inches in length and about a foot sideways. I got somebody else's big pillow and slept in a better bed than I had on the River Queen." He enjoyed it greatly, but I think if I had given him two fence rails to sleep on he would not have found fault. That was Abraham Lincoln in all things that related to his own comfort. He would never let you put yourself out for him under any circumstances.

A NAVAL COMEDY.

Surrender of the Spanish Gunboat Calalao at Manila.

On the afternoon of the 12th (May 12, 1898) a small Spanish gunboat came steaming up Manila bay, directly toward the American fleet. The surprise of the people in the fleet was great; this little vessel seemed so confident and friendly. Finally one of our ships fired a shot across her bow. This did not seem to make any difference to her, for she kept on just the same. Then we saw an officer go alongside from the flagship.

We found out that evening that this vessel was the Spanish gunboat Calalao and that she had been cruising in the southern part of the Philippines for a long time and had not heard about the war, and, the time of her cruise being finished, she was now returning to Manila. The officers and men had been looking forward to this for a long time, because in Manila they were to find their wives, children, parents, friends, theaters, clubs, hotels, newspapers and all the things that make sailors look forward with happiness to getting home. They saw a great many ships in the harbor flying the American flag, but this did not give them any uneasiness, and when the first gun was fired by the American ship they did not notice that the shot came across the bow of their own ship, and thought it was simply the first gun of some salute.

But when the second shot was fired and they heard the whizzing of the shell they knew something was wrong. And when the American officer came on board and told them that every ship in the fleet was destroyed and that they themselves were prisoners of war their feelings of joyful hope went through a change that, let us hope, few of us will ever see.

Summing up a case which lasted several hours, says the Liverpool Post, he said no more than this: "Gentlemen, you have heard both sides. It is for you to say which you believe." Even this does not represent Judge Taylor's best effort in the way of saving his breath. A few years ago he delivered himself of what is supposed to be the shortest summing up on record. He turned to the jury, raised his eyebrows inquiringly, and remarked: "Well, gentlemen?" The art of brevity could no further go.

Noises and Cancer.

Muffle all unnecessary noise, brilliant lighting, disagreeable odors and touch not. Last and most important, eat and drink no poison, even though it should savor of the nectar and ambrosia of Olympus. With the revivifying of the sensory nerves all the rest will fall in and become strong again. And then we may expect to find eyeglasses, ear trumpets and all such aids cast upon the trash heap. There will be nothing to cause irritation, and so we shall have no cancer.—Dr. J. A. Guthrie in Medical Journal.

Food Habits.

"Food habits have queer boundaries," commented ex-Assemblyman Charles Sutherland at luncheon. "In Massachusetts people eat baked beans Saturday night, but not west of Worcester. Along the Connecticut shore an oyster stew is the regular Sunday morning breakfast dish. In Vermont they eat pie for breakfast—always apple pie. The scrapple habit is found only within fifty miles of Philadelphia.—New York World.

Neck Shaving an Old Custom.

A study of the many necks to be seen on the walls of the National Portrait gallery enables one to state that the custom of neck shaving, although said to have been imported from America, was undoubtedly known and most likely popular in the days of Agincourt. The portrait of Henry V. shows quite clearly that his neck was shaved, and, if the king did it, it must have been fashionable.—London Cor. New York Sun.

An Absorbing Case.

"I accept, and, in the exercise of my privilege, I stipulate that the duel shall take place in Lake Pontchartrain in six feet of water, sledgehammers to be used as weapons."

HIS DREAM MATERIALIZED.

Curious Incident In the Career of Novelist S. R. Crockett.

One morning the postman brought to S. R. Crockett, the novelist, a letter from the editor of the St. James' Gazette containing a small check as payment for a contribution. Mr. Crockett knew that nothing was due to him, that he had been paid for all articles, and—remarkable man—he did the check up in an explanatory note and returned it to the editor.

The next day back came the check from the editor—remarkable man—with a note saying it was due. The St. James Gazette had published an article from the pen of Mr. Crockett which had not been paid for, hence the check. Again Mr. Crockett—remarkable man—returned the check, and still the remarkable editor re-forwarded it, this time with the article cut out of the columns of the St. James' Gazette.

Now comes the curious feature of the incident. When Mr. Crockett clapped his eyes on the article he was astonished to find it one of his dreams materialized. One night, going to bed extra tired, he dreamed that a good idea for a St. James' Gazette column had occurred to him, that he then and there sat down, wrote it and posted it. Next morning he remembered his dream and made up his mind some day to write the article exactly as he dreamed he had written it. When, to his astonishment, came article and check from the newspaper. Few writers earn checks while asleep.—London Standard.

East Africa's Big Game.

Big game of British East Africa, outside of the three preserves of the colony, is rapidly vanishing and, according to W. T. Hornaday, "is absolutely certain to disappear in about one-fourth the time that it took South Africa to accomplish the same result." Mr. Hornaday points out that the present legal bag limit is ruinously extravagant. For $250 any man may buy the right to kill 300 head of hoofed and horned animals of forty-four species, not counting carnivorous animals that may also be killed. Thus the richest big game fauna of any one spot in the world, which nature has been several million years in developing and placing there, seems likely to be wiped out by man within the next fifteen years.—Chicago News.

AN ADDRESS BY JUDGE MADDEN

In his address to the grand jury, at the opening of the county court sittings at Kingston, on Tuesday afternoon, Judge Madden, of Napanee, made a kindly reference to Judge Price and Judge Lavell.

"There is another matter to which possibly I ought to make reference," said Judge Madden. "Since the last sittings of this court there has been a change in the judiciary of this county.

"As you all know, His Honor, Judge Lavell, one of the leading barristers and able lawyers of Smith's Falls has been appointed judge of the county of Frontenac. He was born in your city, brought up in your city, and was a student at law as well, and the family name has been intimately connected with the good work of your colleges, churches, and schools and generally with the progress of your city many years ago. He comes to you with every prestige of success and I am safe in predicting that he will have a most useful judicial career, and be a credit and an ornament to the Canadian bench.

"Now while it is an honor (to be coveted) to be recalled to your native county to preside over the courts, it is a greater honor to retire in good health as His Honor Judge Price has done after thirty-seven long years of good and faithful service on the bench. I had the pleasure of practicing before His Honor Judge Price for many years, and he has been associate judge of my own county for upwards of a quarter of a century and I have been associate judge with him in this county upwards of ten years and I know his sterling worth and to be the best of men.

"He has discharged his duties with

BAY OF QUINTE CONFERENCE

THURSDAY.

The general session of the Bay of Quinte Conference met in Trinity church here at 9 o'clock to-day. Rev. Wm. Lambert presiding. Rev. John Garbutt, Cobourg, was elected President on the first ballot. Rev. R. Archibald Delve was elected Secretary on the first ballot, and the following were appointed by the Conference on nomination of the Secretary: Assistant Secretaries, Rev. Wesley Town and W. H. Hopper; Statistical Secretary, Rev. Montague W. Leigh, B. A.; Journal Secretary, Rev. S. T. Tucker, B. A., B. D.; Guardian Reporter, Rev. W. H. Clarke; Conference Letter Writer, Rev. W. H. Spargo; Railway Certificate Clerk, Rev. W. H. Howard.

In the afternoon session, Rev. C. E. Manning, Associate Secretary of Home Missions, enlarged upon the needs of Methodism in his field. Rev. S. T. Bartlett, General Secretary of Epworth Leagues and Sunday Schools, urged local initiative in the Epworth Leagues and Sunday Schools. The problem of church finance was dealt with by Wm. Flavell, Lindsay, and Judge Deroche of Belleville.

The missionary anniversary of the Conference was held in the evening. Col. Adams, Picton, presiding. Missionary addresses were delivered by C. E. E. Weeks, Lindsay, and Mrs. George Jackson, Port Perry, representative of the Women's Missionary Society of the Conference.

FRIDAY.

At the Bay of Quinte Conference on Friday, Rev. J. W. Aikens, of the Metropolitan church, Toronto, addressed the Conference at the morning hour on "The Fullness of Jesus." His words came with power and were an inspiration to all. There was no uncertain sound as to his relation to the barroom business, and the approval of his audience was unmistakable. The voice of the Conference rings out against the liquor traffic.

Miss Kathleen Morton addressed the Conference, also Dr. E. N. Baker on behalf of Albert College.

On reassembling in the afternoon the election of delegates to the General Conference took place. The ministerial college gave a demonstration of keen competition for this desirable appointment, as it took eight ballots to complete the election. Delegates are as follows: John Garbutt, Dr. Shorey, H. B. Kenny, Wm. Lambert, W. B. Tucker, Wm. Johnston, H. S. Spence, Leonard Phelps, M. E. Sexsmith, Chas. Goon, S. T. Bartlett, S. C. Moore, Reserves: Wesley Down, Dr. Baker, Dr. Burwash, J. P. Wilson.

Rev. Dr. Burwash, ex-Chancellor of Victoria, spoke on questionable amusements. Dr. Burwash is an optimist, and claims that the craze for non-elevating pleasures is not as great amongst students to-day as it was five years ago.

The Conference reception service was held at 8 p.m., when Harry A. Frost, B. A., was received into full connection with the ministry. The resolution for his reception being moved by Rev. M. E. Sexsmith, B. A., LL.B., and Rev. H. S. Osborne, B. A., B. D., Rev. John Garbutt, President of the Conference, spoke words of counsel to the candidate, who was received by a unanimous vote of the ministerial session.

At the Bay of Quinte Conference Monday the morning hour address was by Rev. Richard Bamforth, on the subject, "The Christian Soldier." The entire forenoon session was occupied with reports of committees. Rev. Dr.

I had the pleasure of practicing before His Honor Judge Price for many years, and he has been associate judge of my own county for upwards of a quarter of a century and I have been associate judge with him in this county upwards of ten years and I know his sterling worth and to be the best of men.

"He has discharged his duties with zeal and ability, and he has been a careful, painstaking and patient judge, and he has never been led astray from the broad track of common sense. His kindness of heart and never failing courtesy made him a favorite, and he retires in the highest esteem of every member of the bar of your city and every member of the bar of my town. His judgments were impartial, independent and sound in law, and of the thousands of cases that he disposed of in only two was it deemed advisable to lodge an appeal, and in both cases his judgments were sustained. And the peculiar part of this is that it was the first and the last case he tried that were in appeal and his judgments were upheld.

"This is a great compliment indeed, but I think the greater compliment that is paid him to-day, is that of the thousands and thousands of litigents and prisoners who came before him, to-day we hear no word of complaint that any injustice was done to any one of them. This is a good recommendation, indeed, and one which the highest judge in any land might well be proud of. "Gentlemen," said his honor, in conclusion, "I am sure you will all agree with me in wishing that he will long continue to enjoy the leisure he has so fully earned and richly deserved."

FOUL BLOOD IN BEES.

European Foul Brood has broken out in Richmond, and to date over 100 colonies of diseased bees have been reported. European Foul Brood will wipe out all the bees in an apiary very rapidly unless preventative methods are taken. The disease is always worst in the spring, and nearly disappears as soon as the clover flow is on. Good results have been obtained by stimulative feeding, using for each colony 1/2 pint of sugar syrup daily until the clover flow starts.

European Foul Brood is fatal to black bees. It is recommended that every bee-keeper Italianize all his colonies at once, as Italian bees do not suffer from this disease to any extent. The leather colored Italians are the most resistant.

An Apiary Inspector will visit Lennox and Addington next week. All bee-keepers who suspect that they have the disease should notify Mr. G. B. Curran, Agricultural Office, Napanee, that they would like the Inspector to call.

Apiary Demonstrations will be held at the apiary of Walter Russell, Selby, at 1.30 on Tuesday, June 16th, and at the apiary of J. W. Stewart, Camden East, at the same hour, on Friday, June 19th. All bee-keepers are invited to attend. The inspector will show how to inspect a colony for Foul Brood, and will demonstrate the treatment.

At the Bay of Quinte Conference Monday the morning hour address was by Rev. Richard Bamforth, on the subject, "The Christian Soldier." The entire forenoon session was occupied with reports of committees. Rev Dr. S. D. Chown, General Superintendent, presided.

No small interest was manifested in the report of the Temperance and Moral Reform Committee, which was presented by Rev. Wm. Archer. There was only one thought amongst the members of the Conference as to the liquor traffic and its evils. This clause from this report gives the gist of the deliberations:

"We therefore strongly urge the Ministers and laymen within the bounds of this Conference to support only such Candidates at the ensuing elections as shall promise to support by vote and influence the abolishment of the liquor policy."

Strong resolutions were carried also in condemnation of race track gambling and pool room, the cigarette evil, and the white slave traffic. The report was adopted.

FINAL CHANGES AT QUINTE CONFERENCE.

The Bay of Quinte Conference closed its last session Monday afternoon. While the Stationing Committee was struggling with the final draft, Rev. James S. McMullen and Rev. Dr. Hazlewood, Field Secretary of Temperance and Moral Reform, gave splendid addresses in the Conference church. Earlier in the afternoon Rev. Dr. Chown spoke on Church union. He declared that there was nothing to be gained by delay. The negotiations for union should be consummated or abrogated, and his hearers approved.

Worldliness.—Some Christians Half-Asleep—The Awakening of

PASTOR RUSSELL

May 24.—Pastor Russell, whose
Creation is awakening new zeal in Bible study everywhere it is presented, preached to-day from the text, "Awake,
thou that sleep-
est, and arise
from the dead,
and Christ shall give thee light."
Ephesians 5:14.

The Pastor
holds that the majority of humanity pass through life in a dreamy state, thinking about trivialities—what to eat, what to wear, where to go, etc.
—rather than about things pertaining to God and the future life. This state of mental inactivity, he declared, has been brought about by Adam's disobedience to the Divine command. Our first parents sinned;
and their posterity, all mankind,
shared with them the penalty, "Dying, thou shalt die."

But God foreknew the fall of man, and purposed to redeem the human family from death, the speaker declared. In the Divine Program
Jesus was the Lamb of God slain from before the foundation of the world. Therefore when communicating with those who believe His Word, God always speaks of death
as a sleep.

The Awakening of the Soul.

The Pastor discussed his theme in three divisions: the awakening of the world now, the awakening of the Christian, and the future awakening of humanity during the Messianic Kingdom. There is a time, he claimed, when men begin to think of God and the world to come. Before that time some had been steeped in sin; others had lived merely for the things of the present. But somehow or other they began to realize that they were sinners under Divine sentence. Perhaps they get the right view—that the sentence was one of death; but usually they get the wrong one—that it was a sentence of eternal torment.

The majority of children, the Pastor declared, reach this crisis between the ages of twelve and fifteen years. At that period there is a great change in human nature, and therefore it is a most advantageous time for spiritual growth. The speaker dwelt upon the duties of parents and teachers at this important stage of development. While from the very beginning of its existence the child should be trained in the nature and admonition of the Lord, yet both parent and teacher should be especially alert with children at this most favorable time for opening their mental eyes to look beyond the trivialities of the present life to the higher things pertaining to the life to come.

"Arise From the Dead."

The Pastor pointed out the fallacy

Easy to Talk Back Now.

"I'll bet that in days gone by men did not talk back to their wives in the fashion that they do nowadays." "The telephone is certainly a great invention."—Houston Post.

When faith is lost and honor dies the man is dead.—Whittier.

from the very beginning of its existence the child should be trained in the nature and admonition of the Lord, yet both parent and teacher should be especially alert with children at this most favorable time for opening their mental eyes to look beyond the trivialities of the present life to the higher things pertaining to the life to come.

"Arise From the Dead."

The Pastor pointed out the fallacy of the belief that the young must "sow wild oats," and regretted that even Christian parents seemed imbued with this erroneous idea. According to the Scriptures, "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The child mind should ever be kept near the Divine standard.

Those awake to a sense of responsibility to their Creator should arise from the dead condition as far as possible, the Pastor holds. As when one awakens in the morning there is a mental freshness which is invariably lost if one falls asleep again, so the moment of the soul's awakening is a favorable time of which to take advantage. If the soul receives no encouragement at that critical moment, it may drop asleep again. Those who are awake should do all in their power to encourage the newly awakened to arise from the dead conditions around them.

"Christ Shall Give Thee Light."

Those who have awakened are approaching righteousness, the Pastor declared. The Scriptures represent the dead as being down. Those who arise from the dead become upright in character, in desire. But merely to awake to a realization of one's condition is not to become a Christian. While Christ gave the light which enabled one to see that the wages of sin is death, and that the gift of God is life through the Redeemer, yet the newly awakened must accept Christ as their Ransom-sacrifice and lay hold upon Him before they may be considered Christians.

The Pastor explained that we do not become Christians, members of the Body of Christ, when first we awake or when first we arise from the dead. We are merely awakening to see that harmony with God and escape from condemnation for sin are possible. As St. Paul intimates, from the moment we get into Christ we pass from under the Adamic condemnation. No one can have an individual trial until he is freed from that condemnation. A mere realization of one's condition does not constitute a trial for life. Only the Church are now on trial. The world's judgment lies in the future. For nearly nineteen hundred years the judgment of the Church has progressed. The first to be tried was the Head of the Church—our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. He was found worthy and was glorified. All down the Gospel Age the individual members have been tried. Soon the trial of the Church will have been finished. The Last member will have passed beyond the veil and entered into the joys of their Lord.

Men and Jobs.

Apropos of an inefficient manager's resignation, George Gould said to a New York railroad reporter:

"It's every man's desire to wobble round in a big job rather than to fill a small one, and that's why so many resignations are by request."

FIELD HUSBANDRY EXPERIMENTS.

The experimental Farm at Ottawa

a very prominent part of their work.
For the information of those who are interested the more important results of last season's work over the entire issued in Bulletin No. 75 of the experimental farms. It takes up the question of rotation, cultivation, fertilipoints connected with field agriculture.

The information is presented by farms and stations and is, therefore, easily available for study. This bulletin is

IMPORTANT MEETING

An important meeting of the Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance was held at the Alliance Offices, on Friday
noon and evening, June 5th.
President, Rev. Canon Greene, sided.

There was a large attendance members including quite a number different parts of the Province.

Reports were received from various Alliance Committees showing the status of the different departmental activities.

The main interest in the meeting naturally centered in the report of Political Action Committee. The report recommended the adoption of the following Manifesto which was passed:

MANIFESTO.

To the Electors of the Province of Ontario:

The Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance desires at this critical juncture to place before you frankly and fairly the present position of the temperance question in relation to the approaching general election.

The principle of prohibition remedy for the evils of the liquor traffic has three times been affirmed by large majorities in this Province. Municipal prohibition has served very distinct and useful place in the evolution of the reform, so that since three per cent of the municipal authorities are now under local prohibition, hundred and thirteen other municipalities, most of them incorporated cities, towns and villages, have majorities in favor of prohibition have failed to register the necessary sixty per cent vote.

The steady educational work of churches, the discussion and presentation of facts in connection with Option campaigns, and the awakening of the industrial, commercial and scientific world to the economic and physical destructiveness of liquor traffic and the drink habit have created a body of public opinion which calls for a distinct advance in the matter of legislation.

The unanimous vote of many non-partisan Conventions and courts, have called upon the Legislature to lessen these cruel evils
by least wiping out the bar-room, drinking club, and the whole treasurable system.

In accordance with their sound patriotic policy we urge upon friends of our cause the duty of their utmost to secure the nomination and election of men who will present the people upon this issue.

We urge all right thinking citizens to put their temperance principles before any mere party preferences
the approaching contest and vote for candidates who can be relied upon to support the most advanced temperance measure brought before Legislature.

If as we believe, this is the most important question before the election in the Province, a question that has pressed for solution, if it is true wise and enlightened leaders in departments of commercial, industrial and national life are becoming increasingly anxious to destroy the destroyer, we feel justified in asking all who love their country and for the highest interest of their fellow men to rise, if necessary, above party preference and affiliations and in that their representatives shall be untrammelled in their relation to this issue.

Ministers and members of Christian churches! The people of this Province have read and approved of resolutions adopted from time to time by the most authoritative

ECONOMICAL MILK PRODUCTION.

The manufacturer perhaps more than the retailer looks closely after the matter of cost knowing that his principal hope of making good profit lies in attaining economy in the actual production of the article, for no profit can be expected if the selling price is below the cost price.

Is not the dairy farmer a manufacturer? So it would seem to be wisdom to look more closely after cost especially as he does not expect the selling price of men to soar. Assuming that the farm is in good condition and carefully handled, what does milk cost per hundred pounds? That can be ascertained only by keeping records of each individual cow.

This is all the more necessary because "men (and cows) were deceivers ever." They may appear to be good heavy producers, but their value as economical producers can only be determined when their yield of milk and fat is checked up by the scales and test. Of what use is it when the factory pays 95 cents per 100 pounds to keep cows whose milk costs $1.25 per 100 pounds just for feed alone? This is what often happens till cow testing is taken up. Milk and feed records are supplied free on application to the dairy division, Ottawa.

It is quite possible to have one dollar's worth of feed return two dollars' worth of milk through good cows that is, cows selected by the test. This is both economical and profitable milk production. The average cow is not an economical producer because she has not been selected, but, like Topsy, "just grewed." A dairy farmer will prove his business ability as a manufacturer when the herd is composed of economical producers. Make each cow pay a good profit.

Battle Song of Ye Yonge Housewyf.

With arms untied, a maiden knight I come upon the field.
My war song is the kettledrum, a frying pan and shield.
Let fire and iron, steel and blood my youthful heart not daunt,
And let my deeds of valor prove the courage that I vaunt.
The kitchen is the jousting place, my foe the kitchen range,
And I am armed cap-a-pie for this, my tourney strange.
Although a mob cap be my casque, my steed the clothes horse be,
The flour of chivalry am I—to death or victory!
Good poker, help! Thy stirring aid, good spoon, I ask as well!
Come egg me on to batter 'gainst the yeastyen infidel!

Other reports also were giving the progress of the campaign throughout the Province since that already three independent temperance candidates had nominated in the constituencies: Welland, South Wellington, Brockville, while conventions called for West Simcoe, East D. South Waterloo, Manitoulin and places. The reports also show this question was a vital issue most every constituency and to an unprecedented activity on the temperance workers and indicate a great breaking away from old lines on the part of electors.

The report was decidedly optimistic. It was decided that all help should be given wherever their clear cut issue upon the temperance question.

IMPORTANT MEETING

An important meeting of the Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance was held in Alliance Offices, on Friday afternoon and evening, June 5th. The speaker, Rev. Canon Greene, presided.

There was a large attendance of members including quite a number of prominent parts of the Province. Reports were received from the various Alliance Committees showing the status of the different departmental activities.

The main interest in the meeting was centered in the report of the Local Action Committee. The speaker recommended the adoption of the following Manifesto which was as follows:

MANIFESTO.

To the Electors of the Province of Ontario:

The Executive Committee of the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance desires at this critical juncture to place before you frankly and fairly, the present position of the temperance movement in relation to the approaching general election.

The principle of prohibition as a remedy for the evils of the liquor traffic has three times been affirmed by large majorities in this Province. Prohibition has served a distinct and useful place in the history of the reform, so that sixty per cent of the municipalities now under local prohibition. One hundred and thirteen other municipalities, most of them incorporated in towns and villages, have given their votes in favor of prohibition but failed to register the necessary per cent vote.

The steady educational work of the churches, the discussion and presentation of facts in connection with Local Option campaigns, and the awakening of the industrial, commercial and social world to the economic waste and physical destructiveness of the liquor traffic and the drink habit, have created a body of public sentiment which calls for a distinct action in the matter of legislation. The unanimous vote of many large partisan Conventions and churches, have called upon the Legislature to lessen these cruel evils by abolishing out the bar-room, the drinking club, and the whole treating system.

In accordance with their sound and patriotic policy we urge upon the people of our cause the duty of doing their utmost to secure the nomination and election of men who will fairly represent the people upon this supreme issue.

We urge all right thinking citizens to their temperance principles be any mere party preferences in approaching contest and vote only candidates who can be relied upon to support the most advanced temperance measure brought before the Legislature.

As we believe, this is the most important question before the electors of the Province, a question that has longed for solution, if it is true that and enlightened leaders in all strata of commercial, industrial and national life are becoming increasingly anxious to destroy the great evil, we feel justified in asking the highest interest of their fellow-citizens to rise, if necessary, above party prejudice and affiliations and insist that their representatives shall be unimpaired in their relation to this issue.

Members and members of Christian churches! The people of this Province have read and approved of the principles adopted from time to time.

TEMPERANCE PLATFORM OF THE LIBERALS

The following is part of the Manifesto issued by N. W. Rowell to the Electors of Ontario.

WHERE DO YOU STAND?

The following is the policy upon which we ask the electors to pass judgment:

1. The immediate abolition of the bar, including therein the abolition of all hotel and club licenses and therefore with the treating system.

2. Such other restrictions upon the residue of the liquor traffic as experience may show to be necessary to limit its operations and effective to remedy its evils. Local option to be maintained as a means of wiping out the residue of the retail trade where the electors so decide.

3. The strict enforcement of the law by officials in sympathy with the enforcement, and the elimination of political influence from the administration of the law.

4. The regulation and inspection of all houses of public entertainment, so as to insure reasonable accommodation for the travelling public. ...

This policy means:

Hotel liquor licenses. Every one wiped out. This means that liquor cannot be sold anywhere on the premises.

Club liquor licenses. Every one wiped out.

Treating system. Abolished.

Shops are dealt with, but in a different way from bars:

1. They will come under further restrictions.

2. They can be wiped out by local option on a majority vote where the electors so decide.

3. New shop licenses cannot be issued in the place of bar licenses abolished.

Note—In nine-tenths of the municipalities of the province there are at present no shop licenses.

IN NINE-TENTHS OF THE MUNICIPALITIES THEREFORE, OUR POLICY MEANS THE COMPLETE ABOLITION OF THE RETAIL SALE OF LIQUOR.

"The pledge I made in 1911 is now redeemed, and the responsibility rests upon the electors of this province to say whether the open bar shall continue in our midst or be forever wiped out.

"I now make this further promise and pledge to the electors of the province:

"If the electors express their approval of this policy by returning us to power, in the next session of the legislature legislation will be enacted which will give full effect to the policy I have now laid before you."

DOMINION ALLIANCE POLICY.

"The policy we propose is that adopted unanimously, irrespective of party affiliations, by the organized temperance and Christian forces of the province in 1902, and pressed upon the successive governments of the province from that day to this. In the manifesto of the Dominion Alliance, preceding the general election of 1908 the following statement appears:

"We again affirm that the legislation which public opinion will warrant and which the legislature should pass, is for the abolishment of the barroom and the treating system; and drinking in clubs, and the imposition of such

This is the condition in which an Alliance of the Christian Churches of our land can at the sordid and solidly united as that support the liquor traffic. Will you act as independently for right as the liquor interests do for their own selfish ends? If you do, the Legislature will ABOLISH THE T-ROOM. Signed on behalf of the entire Committee.

...mon R. W. E. Greene, President, and H. H. Spence, Secretary. Her reports also were given relating the progress of the campaign throughout the Province showing already three independent temperance candidates had been nominated in the constituencies of land, South Wellington and Belleville, while conventions were held for West Simcoe, East Durham, and Waterloo, Manitoulin and others. The reports also showed that the question was a vital issue in almost every constituency and there is unprecedented activity on the part of temperance workers and indication of a breaking away from old party lines on the part of electors.

...e report was decidedly optimistic, as decided that all help possible should be given wherever there is a real issue upon the temperance question.

...temperance and christian forces of the province in 1902, and pressed upon the successive governments of the province from that day to this. In the manifesto of the Dominion Alliance, preceding the general election of 1908 the following statement appears: "We again affirm that the legislation which public opinion will warrant and which the legislature should pass, is for the abolishment of the barroom and the treating system, and drinking in clubs, and the imposition of such restrictions upon the liquor traffic as would most effectively curtail its operations and remedy its evils."

This was repeated in the manifesto of 1911.

"That for which the organized temperance and christian forces of the province have worked and prayed for years is now within their reach, and it rests with them to say whether the open bar shall be continued or forever wiped out. We are fighting the organized liquor interests and all the money and resources they can command. Now is the most critical hour of the fight. On which side will your vote and influence be cast? For the liquor interests and the open bar, or for the boy, the home, the church, the state? I believe the conscience of Ontario is against the open bar. To that conscience I appeal with confidence. Every vote cast in this election is a vote for or against the bar. Which will yours be? We are fighting your fight. We ask every man and every woman to do their utmost from now until June 29th, and if you do, the open bar in Ontario will be forever wiped out."

RECORDS AND REFORMS.

Toronto World (Conservative.)

Mr. Rowell has a right to be proud of the fine demonstration he evoked in Massey Hall, and he has this reflection to give him confidence, that if the Ontario voters respond to his appeal as they did to the Ross plebiscite of fourteen years ago he will be returned to the legislature at the head of a working majority. The situation is a more critical one for the government than their supporters generally conceive. The growth of independent electoral opinion has brought about the feeling that governments exist for the advantage of the governed, and that when benefits are required, social reforms urgently needed, and measures adopted in other enlightened communities are ripe for application in Ontario, it does not matter which party gives relief so long as relief is given.

No gratitude can be expected by governments. Dr. Johnson explained gratitude as "a lively sense of favors to come." Premiers should have that epigrammatic definition framed and hung up in their private offices. No government is sustained on the strength of what it has done; it can only rely on the strength of what it is going to do. This is it which gives the opposition an equal chance in every election. An opposition, if it can convince the people, may do as great things as any government. Sir James Whitney has promised to continue his present policies. Mr. Rowell promises to abolish the bar and institute tax reform. The positive factor in Mr. Rowell's platform will, with many people, outweigh the premier's honorable and progressive past.

REJECTED REFORMS.

The Ontario Government asks through one of its organs whether Mr. Rowell is opposed to this and the other thing that the Government has done. Mr. Rowell is not opposing so much as he is proposing. He is the leader of the constructive, progressive forces of Ontario. Many progressive proposals made by Mr. Rowell or his friends were voted down by the Government. They include

The appointment of a commission to inquire into the high cost of living; the appointment of a commission to investigate rural depopulation, scarcity of farm labor, decrease in production of food, decline in the strength and vitality of the rural school and the rural church.

A resolution calling for a campaign of publicity for New Ontario, a selected immigration for the settlement of the country, better transportation and conditions of settlement.

The creation of a department of labor to study and promote the welfare of workers; investigation of unemployment with a view to remedial measures; a commission to enquire into the conditions of labor, including the hours of labor and minimum wage; a modern Factory Act, with stricter laws against child labor.

The abolition of the bar and other temperance measures. The Government, in rejecting the abolition of the bar, promised to legislate against treating, but nothing has been done, although two years have elapsed since the promise.

Tax reform—intended to relieve the man who improves land and tax the speculator. The Government refused to do this for Toronto, in spite of a large popular vote in its favor, refused to do it for New Ontario, and refused to allow municipalities the option of making the reform.

The Government granted votes to corporations, but refused them to married women; refused to give married women the franchise now exercised by widows and spinsters.

Of course, the Government can present a list of things it has done, especially in its earlier and more vigorous years. No Government can remain in power nine years and do nothing. But the energy of the Government has declined, and the record of last session is full of rejections of progressive reforms.

THE MAN WHO USED COMMON-SENSE.

John Arbuthnot, writing of the late Sir William Whyte in June CANADA MONTHLY, tells a characteristic story of him when he was general superintendent of the western division on the Canadian Pacific. He says:

"Men who worked beside him twenty years ago tell many stories of the practical common-sense that he brought to bear on the problems of the road from the beginning of his service. The story of the Edmonton oats is one of the most typical."

"In his first general superintendent days, the Canadian Pacific was having a world of trouble with its freight cars engaged in carrying oats. There was a large and increasing tonnage of grain to be hauled, and all the rolling stock was needed. Yet the repair shops were in constant receipt of freight cars which came limping in with ruined journals, broken down apparently by overloading. The shops swore at the yard men, and the division superintendent, with his desk piled up with kicks from irate farmers, swore at the shops. Yet the yard-men accused, arose in righteous indignation and pointed to the load-lines that showed unmistakably above the grain in the cars."

"Now a load-line is a mark restricting the capacity of the car, according to the weight of the material carried. Figuring oats at thirty-four pounds to the bushel, which up to that time was the standard weight everywhere, the yard-men had loaded the cars exactly to the load-lines, and by all ordinary laws, the cars were O. K."

"In the course of time the trouble came up to General Superintendent of the western division, William Whyte. He did not swear at anyone. That wasn't his way. He listened to the end, and then said matter-of-factly:

"Suppose you weigh those oats." "The division superintendent opened his mouth to speak; thought better of it, and sought a scale with a bushel of oats. Thirty-four—thirty-six—thirty-eight—These western-grown oats took from forty to forty-six pounds of iron to balance them, and the mystery was solved. William Whyte had used plain, sane common-sense, which after all is as uncommon as any other quality of mankind; and in three minutes had settled a difficulty over which the whole prairie section of the line had boggled for weeks."

A Tangled Web

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

Author of "Beaton's Bargain," "His Perfect Trust,"
"By Another Name," "Her Heart's Idol,"
"Half a Truth," "H's Rival."

"I see you have his last photograph," resumed Lady Dorrington. "Bad boy! He refused it to me! Well, dear Mrs. Ruthven, tell me—how are you? I was so sorry to hear you had sprained your ankle."
"It was only a severe twist, and it is all right again. I was foolish enough to let myself be persuaded to climb down some rocks at Ventnor, and suffered accordingly. One should always stick to one's principle!—and mine is to avoid unnecessary exertion, except riding. I now hope to dance at your brother's ball."

"He will be greatly disappointed if you do not. He looks to you to be queen of the fete; and I fancy the county is on the tiptoe of expectation respecting you also."

"Why! what can they possibly know about me?" asked Mrs. Ruthven, with a pleased smile.

"Oh! we are sad gossips in Blankshire, and deeply interested in possibilities which may affect us socially."

"Does not that Miss L'Estrange, who was staying with you last spring, live near Evesleigh?" asked Mrs. Ruthven abruptly.

"Yes, close by. She has a little property bordering my brother's, and is a distant cousin."

"A little property! I was in hopes it was a big one; for I have an idea Mr. Marsden was a good deal taken in that quarter, nor am I surprised; Miss L'Estrange is a charming girl."

Lady Dorrington glanced at her keenly.

"Oh! very nice, indeed, but I should never forgive her if she married Clifford; and he could not be so insane. He would not marry her. Indeed, a mere inexperienced girl could never be so attractive to him as a woman of the world."

"It does not strike me that Miss L'Estrange is a mere ingenue. However, as her fortune is insignificant it does not matter," and the fair widow stifled a yawn. "When do you propose going to Evesleigh then?"

"The day after to-morrow—and you?"

"I am invited for the 20th, and I propose to arrive that afternoon. The ball is fixed, I believe, for Wednesday."

"Is there any one—any men, I mean—you would like Clifford to ask? I can send the invitations before I leave this afternoon."

"You are really too kind. I should not dream of exacting—"

"Oh! there is no obligation," interrupted Lady Dorrington. "We want a number of dancing men, and you may know some."

"The only person I can think of is Captain Shirley."

"Very well; what is his address, and who is he?"

"Mr. Marsden knows him already. He was in my husband's regiment. He is a good dancer and a presentable person. He has left the army, I believe, and his address is 'The Doric Club.'"

"Very well. Now tell me what you

"No, Shirley!" she returned with sudden earnestness, raising herself on her cushions as she spoke. "English society is a bigger thing than either of us imagined. I have a good start, that is all. The want of family connections is a serious matter. Then having been at school in Paris till I went out to join my father, is another drawback. If I had married sooner, a man of more importance than poor Charlie, and returned with him here, I should have made a place for myself; but I shall do it all the same, only it will take more time. I have no basis for my operations, except my late husband's relations."

Shirley made a slight gesture of assent. "I suppose," he said, "you believe that what you call a position in London society, is worth the trouble it will cost?"

"I do," thoughtfully. "I have, as you know, many other pastimes, but when I weary of them, this ambition always remains to occupy me!"

Shirley knocked the top of his cane softly and reflectively against his small white pointed teeth.

"I was a fool," he said somewhat abruptly. "To dream I could persuade you to marry me."

"Yes," she returned gently, with a slight smile. "I think you were."

"You are charmingly candid! Well, Mrs. Ruthven, have you thought favorably of my proposition?"

"To appoint you my trustee in the place of my father's old ally, the late Mr. Burgess? No, my dear friend! Not at present, at least."

"But you do not entirely reject me! You must feel sure no one could be so devoted to your interests as I am."

"I am quite sure no interest would come before mine, save one, and that is your own."

Shirley showed all his white teeth in a pleasant smile. "You are very keen, but you do me an injustice," he said, "and believe me your interests need looking after; I have been making quiet inquiries and I find your present and sole trustee, Clifford Marsden, has been in a very shaky condition, for some time, but has lately been evidently flush of cash—cash which I suspect is yours."

"Oh! nonsense," carelessly. "Marsden may be a spendthrift, which after all is only suspected, but he is a man of unblemished honor."

"I don't believe in unblemished honor," observed Shirley calmly.

"Probably not," she returned. "I am in no hurry, and I should like to consult Mr. Marsden as to a second trustee. It suits me to stand well and on confidential terms with my late husband's relatives."

"No doubt; and," with a keen glance, "should this especial relative become his successor, a delay in naming the second trustee might save trouble in case a new settlement is required."

"Precisely," said Mrs. Ruthven with much composure. "I should certainly accept Clifford Marsden were morning, and au revoir."

Shirley kissed her hand with an air of gallantry, and left the room.

When the door had closed on him Mrs. Ruthven sprang up with the quick feline grace of a tigress. Darting to her writing-table, she seized the photograph of Clifford Marsden, and stood for a moment intensely still, gazing at it. Then she murmured:

"Purely a matter of calculation," and laughed aloud. "Only a matter of calculation," she repeated. "Oh, my prince! my king!"

Kissing the picture passionately, she threw it from her on the table, and crouching again on the sofa, sat with clasped hands gazing at some imaginary picture as if lost in a dream.

All Blankshire rejoiced that Evesleigh Manor was once more opened to the county, and to the severely clerical society of Oldbridge.

Though the present owner had been most popular with all sorts and conditions of men, his prolonged absence was beginning to tell against him, and whispers of his extravagance were raising serious doubts that he would again show himself among his provincial peers. The rumored magnificence of his preparations gave the lie most agreeably to these ill-natured reports. Every one welcomed the idea of such a neighbor living in their midst, and entertaining both great and small with the open-handed hospitality which characterized the Marsdens of old.

Enlivened by the gossip to which this unexpected event gave rise, time flew quickly, and the fingers of the local dressmakers worked nimbly, while almost every train which stopped at Oldbridge brought men or munitions of war desired for the manor house.

Mrs. L'Estrange and her step-daughter took a natural and lively interest in the preparations. Marsden himself was frequently at the cottage, always in the most charming spirits, and boyishly full of anticipated success.

It was the day but one before the ball. Nora was sitting near one of the drawing-room windows which was open, while a bright wood fire crackled on the hearth. It was a soft, gray day, as if nature was tenderly mourning the departed summer, and the woods gave out a faint autumnal fragrance.

Nora sung softly in snatches as she plied her needle diligently, braiding a winter frock for Beatrice.

"May I come in through the window?" asked Winton, so suddenly from the veranda that Nora started and blushed vividly.

"I ought to send you round by the front door as a punishment for frightening me!" she said laughing, as she rose and gave him her hand.

"But you shall be absolved, for I see you bring me 'Cornhill.'"

"Lie there and wait, good dog," cried Winton, when he had whistled his attendant pointer to heel, and the animal, of the beautiful, red-brown Irish breed, obeyed at once.

"What a dear dog! We sorely need a watch-dog," said Nora. "You know this place is rather solitary at night. The squire has promised me one of Queenie's pups as soon as it is old enough to leave its mother."

"If it is worthy of its race, you will have a treasure. The Evesleigh mastiffs are famous."

Winton had entered while they spoke, and instinctively walked to the fireplace, where he stood surveying the room and its occupant.

"What a pleasant room this is," he said abruptly, after a few moments' silence. "I never see anything like it elsewhere. It is pretty, yet her earnest eyes full on him. "Have I done—" her sentence was finished, for the door was suddenly open, Bea, followed by mother, ran into the room, and pleasant tete-a-tete was over.

"Oh, Nora, poor Waldman nearly killed!" cried Bea. "He hardly got away fast enough the wagonette, it was driving so to meet the train."

Mrs. L'Estrange was greeting them while she spoke.

"Yes," she said, "the Eve guests are gathering fast. Mrs. Winton arrived yesterday, and Lord Harcourt, Captain Shirley, some other people, arrive to-day. 'Shirley!' repeated Winton, 'coming?'"

"Do you know him?" asked Nora.

"Not personally; but I have some curious reports about him. He was in Ruthven's regiment, there was a story about his having done something queer about a clerk or a bill; but he paid up, I believe, and then retired. I never met him. I suppose gossip is as ill-natured in India as elsewhere," said L'Estrange.

"Rather more so," returned Nora.

"Why, Nora, here are Lady Dorrington, and Mr. Marsden, and their lady and gentleman," cried Beatrice; "they are coming from Oldbridge."

"Yes," exclaimed Nora; "they bring Mrs. Ruthven and Lady Dorrington; I will go and meet them," and she went into the hall.

"Well, dear, I have brought Ruthven to see you," cried Lady Dorrington, kissing Nora's brow.

"And I am delighted to see Ruthven," said Nora, with graceful self-possession, feeling on her ground.

"You are very good," murmured that lady, who was most elaborately got up in a country costume, for a society play at the Comte Francaise, and was feeling dreadfully tired even after so short a time in her "Louis Quinze" shoes.

"And how are you, my princess?" asked Lord Dorrington, jovial, red-faced country gentleman. "How do you like living in the west after your foreign training?"

"Exceedingly well; pray come and sit down," and she ushered them into the pleasant drawing-room, which had called forth Beatrice's eulogy.

"How goes it, fair cousin?"

Marsden, who was the last to enter, "It is quite thirty-six hours since I saw you; I suppose nothing strange has occurred in the interval?"

"I shall have your puppy to-morrow," told Stubbs to bring him over; "not feed him too well."

Mrs. Ruthven threw a keen glance round the entrance hall and drawing-room—quickly appraising the value of the old-fashioned but well-arranged furniture, and marveling at the expression of refinement and prettiness produced by such simple materials. In her heart she wondered and chafed at the consideration accorded by such important persons as Marsden and the Dorringtons to a couple of poor relations, with nothing particular to recommend them and who, on their part, treated distinguished visitors with the politeness of perfect equals.

"You have made the house so pretty, dear Mrs. L'Estrange," said Lady Dorrington, who filled a large easy-chair to overflowing. "I am afraid you would find everything fearfully dilapidated after such long absence."

"Our tenants seem to have taken very good care of the place. There is but little mischief done," said the two elder ladies plunged into

"I want a number of dancing men, and you may know some."

"The only person I can think of is Captain Shirley."

"Very well; what is his address, and who is he?"

"Mr. Marsden knows him already. He is in my husband's regiment. He is a good dancer and a presentable person. He has left the army, I believe, and his address is 'The Doric Club.'"

"Very well. Now tell me what you did and who you saw at Cowes? How do you like English life so far, and have any of our brilliant youths impressed your widowed heart?"

Mrs. Ruthven laughed low and softly.

"Life in England is very livable so far as I have seen it. With a few ingredients it would be delightful, and these—"

"Captain Shirley!" said a waiter, throwing open the door.

"There is an end of our gossip, my dear," said Lady Dorrington, "and I can not wait."

Mrs. Ruthven did not leave her seat. She held out a slim hand, which was somewhat darker in tint than her face and throat, and received the new-comer's profoundly respectful greeting with a quiet smile.

"Lady Dorrington, let me present Captain Shirley to you."

"We have just been speaking of you, Captain Shirley," said her ladyship blandly. "My brother, Clifford Marsden, is gathering his forces for a ball on the 23rd, and if you are disengaged and inclined to spend a few days at Evesleigh, we—I speak as temporary mistress of the house—shall be delighted to see you. There is good shooting, some pleasant people, and Mrs. Ruthven."

"Such attractions are not to be resisted. I gladly accept," returned Shirley, with a low bow.

"You must take the Oldbridge and 'Anchester' line," added Lady Dorrington. "We will send carriages to meet the six o'clock train on the 21st. Now I must run away, dear Mrs. Ruthven."

The ladies kissed and parted, Shirley escorting Lady Dorrington to her carriage.

When he returned Mrs. Ruthven had resumed her seat on the sofa, and did not speak for a moment. He stood looking at her in silence also. Captain Shirley was below middle height, well but slightly made, with a dark keen face, the features small, and well cut, piercing black eyes, the expression of which was in general carefully guarded. He wore a small thick moustache, the rest of his face was clean shaven, the blue-black of a naturally strong beard showing clearly through the skin. From head to heel he was perfectly, freshly dressed, and had an air of extreme neatness.

"Well," said Mrs. Ruthven at last, raising her eyes slowly to his, "you see I look after your interests. I have managed this very pleasant invitation for you, and I imagine we shall meet a very good set at Mr. Marsden's."

"You are extremely good to me in all minor matters," said Shirley, drawing a chair near her sofa.

"With which you must be satisfied," she said calmly, adding after an instant's pause, "and thankful."

"I am thankful! I am very thankful for the little note in which you warned me you would be in town for two or three days, and would talk over the suggestion I made, instead of refusing it at once. How long do you remain?"

"Till Monday! I have not as yet such a circle of acquaintance, nor such a multiplicity of invitations as would enable me to fill up a spare day or two."

"I fancy you command society pretty much as you like."

consult Mr. Marsden as to a second trustee. It suits me to stand well and on confidential terms with my late husband's relatives."

"No doubt; and," with a keen glance, "should this especial relative become his successor, a delay in naming the second trustee might save trouble in case a new settlement is required."

"Precisely," said Mrs. Ruthven with much composure. "I should certainly accept Clifford Marsden were he to ask me. The position as his wife would suit me exactly. But I do not think he will, unless, indeed, he wants my money very much. He is not a bit in love with me, nor I with him, but it might do. Indeed, I am now old enough to feel that marriage is too important a matter to be confused with love! I was always accustomed to this view of the subject in my school-days, but stupidly allowed a whim to blind me when I married poor Captain Ruthven, who was really very nice."

"Well, I wish all success to your platonic scheme! But at the same time, I should advise you to take every possible precaution as respects the trusteeship. I have generally observed that honor is blighted or unblemished very much in proportion to the degree of temptation to which it is exposed. You must remember that, save myself, you have few old original friends, if any, in England; and in all sincerity I am devoted to you."

"I am really inclined to believe you," said Mrs. Ruthven with a soft smile, and seductive up-turning of her eyes, "so I will try and do you a good turn. At Evesleigh you will probably meet a very charming girl—a cousin of the Marsdens; she has a small property (I will inquire into its value), and if worth the trouble you might win and marry her. I will give you all the help I can."

"You are very good. As an abstract idea, I am not a believer in marriage, but I am open to conviction. Since I left the service to live on my private fortune, I have not done so badly; what with a little luck on the Stock Exchange, and a little judgment in making a book—"

"Take care, all gambling is risky; but as you do dabble in such matters, I wish you would give me an idea how I can get more than three and a half per cent.—that is all I receive for forty or fifty thousand pounds?"

"Fifteen hundred a year! Can your highly honorable trustee do no better for you than that? You must have a weak spot in your heart for him, or you would never stand it."

"There is no question of weakness," she returned scornfully. "Our relations, if any ever exist between us, will be purely a matter of calculation."

Shirley looked down with a slight incredulous smile, and Mrs. Ruthven watched him with a glance of fierce intense anger. Quickly recovering herself, she added, with insolent indifference:

"Believe or not, as you choose."

"I much prefer believing," returned Shirley. "Now, what are you going to do the rest of your exile here? Will you come down to Oxford with me to-morrow? It is one of the places you ought to be able to talk about!"

"If you will come back and dine with me at 7.30 to-day, I shall have made up my mind, and tell you."

"To hear is to obey. I shall be here punctually; and in the meantime I will think over the question of investments! Three and a half per cent! The God of Love himself must have blindfolded you before you submitted to such robbery."

"As you like," returned Mrs. Ruthven coldly and carelessly, "so good-Queen's pups as soon as it is old enough to leave its mother."

"If it is worthy of its race, you will have a treasure. The Evesleigh mastiffs are famous."

Winton had entered while they spoke, and instinctively walked to the fireplace, where he stood surveying the room and its occupant.

"What a pleasant room this is," he said abruptly, after a few moments' silence. "I never see anything like it elsewhere. It is pretty, yet not too fine for use, and supremely home-like. You can not fancy what a charm there is about everything home-like to an outsider like myself. Brookdale and its owners will be my most lasting memories of the old country, hereafter."

"I am very glad you appreciate it, and glad, too, that you have come back in such good humor. Had you good sport at Meathlands?"

"Very fair; nothing remarkably exciting."

"I suppose not, as you have returned so soon. I thought you were not to be back till to-morrow."

"I was rather bored. And how is Mrs. L'Estrange?"

"Very well. She has gone down to the village with Bea. I stayed at home because I rather expect my godmother, Lady Dorrington."

"Oh, she is your godmother, is she?" said Winton, settling himself in a corner of the sofa near his companion, who resumed her needlework. "When did she arrive?"

"On Saturday. She came earlier than was expected, so the squire was out riding with me. I do not think she was pleased."

"Indeed! Are you fond of riding?"

"Yes; but I should have enjoyed it more, but for the want of practice all the time we were in Germany. The squire says I don't sit badly, and that he will make a good horsewoman of me before the autumn is over."

"Ha! Is he going to stay here, then?"

"I suppose so; I hope so; he is very nice and kind. I was quite surprised to find him still so young. I used to think of him as being as old as my father. I was accustomed to see them together when I was a child. He must have been quite a boy then."

"No; not quite. He is only a year younger than I am," returned Winton, gazing dreamily with a softened expression at her deft fingers and pretty pose.

"Is it possible?" cried Nora in frank, uncomplimentary surprise.

"I suppose, then, you consider me a sort of grandfather?" said he, with a grim smile.

"No, indeed!" lifting her eyes with a sweet look of apology to his, "only you are so much graver, and—and—more dignified, that," she paused.

"A gracious translation of the first terms which suggested themselves. I suspect," said Winton, laughing good-humoredly. "Then I have been broiling for years under an Indian sun, in an up-country station, where my days have been occupied in dealing justice to a lot of ruffians, extracting taxes and hunting big game. You can not wonder that I am a little rusty and unfitted to amble in a lady's chamber."

"You amble very gently in curs."

"That is, I do not absolutely smash the china toys every time I walk across the room! Do you know I was half afraid I should find you tyrannized over by my old friend, Helen Landell, but I do not believe you do, though I imagine there is a dash of the tyrant in you."

"But why?" asked Nora, turning distinguished visitors with the politeness of perfect equals.

"You have made the house pretty, dear Mrs. L'Estrange," said Lady Dorrington, who filled a large easy-chair to overflowing. "I afraid you would find everything fearfully dilapidated after such long absence."

"Our tenants seem to have taken very good care of the place. There is but little mischief done." The two elder ladies plunged into domestic discussion, while Nora, having introduced Mrs. Ruthven, her step-mother, and placed her comfortable seat by the window, presented Winton to Lord Dorrington.

"I think I had the pleasure of meeting you at Sir George Barry said the latter, and the two gentlemen spoke a little apart, while Marsden took up and examined the old Dresden on the mantel-piece."

"What a pretty place, said Mrs. Ruthven looking out on the lawn. "But the view is a little limited it not, Mr. Marsden? You must rather trust, my dear Miss L'Estrange, shut up here after the life of life abroad?"

"Life is much freer here, I assure you. I can go in and out as I like and I find so much to do, the day not long enough."

"When you are a little older, ambition begins to wake," said Mrs. Ruthven, with a caressing smile. "You will sigh for a wider sphere and, no doubt, find it."

"Ah!" exclaimed Nora, her cheeks overflowing with a vague, delicate unaccountable sense of pleasure. "I believe I am incapable of ambition. Why should I trouble about a thing beyond my present state? I have all I want, all I can possibly wish for; if I need a little change can travel awhile—but always with the delicious sense of having a holiday ready for me. I look upon myself as a very lucky girl!"

Mrs. Ruthven laughed lightly, with a tinge of mockery. "I have least seen one contented individual," she said, throwing a languid glance to Marsden, who came to the side.

"I am glad to have been able to introduce you to a happy valley which the princess, its possessor, does not pine to leave," he said.

"I should like to have a look over your gardens, Nora," remarked Lord Dorrington.

"By all means. Will you come, Mrs. Ruthven?" she asked. "We shall have tea when we come." Mrs. Ruthven hesitated. She really felt tired; but she saw Marsden was going, and she did not like to stay behind. It bored her to be obliged to drag round the pleasure grounds and small kitchen-garden to listen to Lord Dorrington'squisition on espaliers and wall-fruits—and queries as to how the farm was managed. Then the cocks, hens and ducks were visited—even neatly kept pig, and a couple of sweet, patient-looking cows, whose heads Nora rubbed as though she had never been away from her country home.

Lord Dorrington quite enjoyed poking about—and even Marsden seemed unaccountably interested in the rubbishy details of a paltry little place. So Mrs. Ruthven determined to occupy herself with Mark Winton.

"I am afraid you do not remember me, Mr. Winton," she said, with gentle smile, showing her pea-teeth.

"Oh, yes!" raising his hat; "I perfectly remember having had the pleasure of meeting you at Simsbury when I was staying with Colonel Dacre and his wife."

"Ah, yes—to be sure," with earnest eyes full on him. "What I done," her sentence was never held for the door was dashed lenly open, Bea, followed by her her, ran into the room, and the sant tete-a-tete was over. "Oh, Nora, poor Waldman was ly killed!" cried Bea. "He could ly get away fast enough from wagonette, it was driving so fast meet the train."

"L'Estrange was greeting Win- while she spoke.

"Yes," she said, "the Evesleighs are gathering fast. Mrs. Ruthven arrived yesterday, and Lord Almarcourt, Captain Shirley and e other people, arrive to-day." "Shirley!" repeated Winton. "Is he ing?"

"Do you know him?" asked Nora. "ot personally; but I have heard e curious reports about him. He e in Ruthven's regiment, and e was a story about his having e something queer about a cheque bill; but he paid up, I believe, then retired, I never met him."

"suppose gossip is as ill-natured ndia as elsewhere," said Mrs. strange.

"rather more so," returned Win-

"Why, Nora, here are Lady Dorton, and Mr. Marsden, and another lady and gentleman," cried Bea; "they are coming from the ge."

"es," exclaimed Nora; "they are ing Mrs. Ruthven and Lord ington; I will go and meet ;" and she went into the hall.

"ell, dear, I have brought Mrs. ven to see you," cried Lady ington, kissing Nora's brow.

"nd I am delighted to see Mrs. ven," said Nora, with gracious ossession, feeling on her own id.

"ou are very good," murmured Ruthven, who was most elaborate- it up in a country costume, fit a society play at the Comedie caise, and was feeling dreadful- ed even after so short a walk r "Louis Quinze" shoes.

"nd how are you, my pretty ?" asked Lord Dorrington — a l, red-faced country gentleman. "do you like living in the wilds your foreign training?"

"ceedingly well; pray come in sit down;" and she ushered into the pleasant drawing- , which had called forth Win- eology.

"ow goes it, fair cousin?" said den, who was the last to enter. "s quite thirty-six hours since I ou; I suppose nothing strange occurred in the interval? You have your puppy to-morrow. I Stubbs to bring him over; do eed him too well.

"s. Ruthven threw a keen glance l the entrance hall and drawing- —quickly appraising the small of the old-fashioned but well- ged furniture, and marveling at expression of refinement and iness produced by such scant ials. In her heart she wonder- id chafed at the consideration ded by such important persons arsden and the Dorringtons to ple of poor relations, with no- particular to recommend them, who, on their part, treated their guished visitors with the easy ness of perfect equals.

"ou have made the house very , dear Mrs. L'Estrange," cried Dorrington, who filled a large hair to overflowing. "I was l you would find everything ly dilapidated after such a absence."

"en tenants seem to have taken good care of the place. There t little mischief done." And wo elder ladies plunged into a slight change of color. "I forgot that I had seen you there. It was of the winter at Delhi, when my poor husband's regiment was quartered there, I spoke. But now you have mentioned the Dacres—what has become of them?"

"Mrs. Dacre is dead," said Winton, shortly; "and Dacre is married again."

"Ah!" she returned, with a sigh, "the dead are soon forgotten."

"And the living, often, not much considered," added Winton, dryly.

"What a bright, radiant creature that Miss L'Estrange looks!" said the fair widow, sweetly, after a moment's pause. "Is she really so contented with her secluded home as she seems?"

"I see no reason to doubt it."

"Then, depend upon it, her heart is filled and satisfied, in some way, or by some one," and she glanced at Marsden, who was stroking a little black kitten that Nora had picked up.

Winton's eyes followed hers, but he made no reply, and then the young proprietress suggested going in to tea, as she was sure Mrs. Ruthven looked tired.

A tempting tea-table was spread with toast and hot cakes, and the conversation grew lively, and even noisy, as the prospects of the ball were discussed. At last the evening began to darken, and Lady Dorrington proposed their returning.

"You look pale and weary," said Marsden, in a low voice, to Mrs. Ruthven; "stay here, and I will send the pony-carriage over for you."

"Oh, thank you! I shall manage to walk back."

Adieu exchanged, the party set forth, Nora and Bea accompanying them as far as the bridge. When half-way across, Marsden exclaimed: "Excuse me a moment—I quite forgot a message for Mrs. L'Estrange," and he turned back quickly, overtaking Nora, who was alone.

"Be sure you send for what flowers you require, Nora," he said. "I told the gardener not to cut any till he knew what you wanted."

"You are really too good, squire. Your guests will want them all. I have what I need at home!"

"Then I will select for you myself. See that you wear mine, if you prefer Winton's—"

"Why, Mr. Winton would never dream of offering any one flowers," said Nora, laughing. "I shall certainly wear yours, and try to look my best for your hall."

"Look yourself," said Marsden, adding in a different tone, "sweet cousin and queen!"

He laughed a rather forced laugh. "Adieu, Sir Knight!" returned Nora, laughing; "go and take care of Mrs. Ruthven," and she ran away into the house, reaching it in time to say good-bye to Winton, who was about to start on his homeward walk to Oldbridge.

Mrs. Ruthven was very tired, she said, and therefore silent, but in reality she was asking herself, over and over again, what it was that Marsden went back for. She deeply distrusted Nora.

CHAPTER III.

Both Mrs. L'Estrange and her step-daughter uttered exclamations of surprise and admiration as they entered the hall of Evesleigh Manor House on the night of the ball.

It was large and oblong, occupying the height of two stories, with a double staircase at the back, curving gently to an arch, beneath which a door led to the rooms in the rear of the mansion. A gallery of carved oak surrounded it on three sides. Below were the music-room and ball-room.

clasped her arms.

"I never saw anything like her jewels," said Nora to Winton, who had taken his stand beside her.

"I should like to know their real value, and what they cost old Guthrie," he returned. "I fancy there are some curious stories attached to these fine things."

Here Mrs. Ruthven came straight to where they stood, followed by a neat, accurately dressed, keen-eyed man.

"Ah! good-evening, Miss L'Estrange. Isn't this a pretty room? Really, the decorations are in admirable taste. I must compliment you on your dress, if you will forgive me," she said, looking keenly at Nora from head to foot, with a comprehensive glance.

The dress was a pretty combination of cream satin, tulle powdered with pearl beads, and pearl fringe, bouquets of fresh green grass and wild foliage decorated the skirt, and a small coronet of similar leaves gave a becoming stateliness to her well-shaped head.

Mrs. Ruthven felt that she was a dangerous rival, or might be, if she knew how to use her advantages, but the honest steadiness and tranquility of her large dark-gray eyes, seemed to assure the dainty intriguer that she was more than a match for her unconscious antagonist.

"I am infinitely flattered, Mrs. Ruthven," exclaimed Nora, with a pleased smile and a slight blush; "your approbation is a compliment—as to you, you are quite too dazzling. I never saw anything like your rubies before. I confess I should like to see all your jewels one day."

"You shall, if you like. Meantime, here is Captain Shirley, waiting for the introduction I promised him. Captain Shirley—Miss L'Estrange."

"May I have the honor of the first dance, Miss L'Estrange?" he asked, with a low bow and an air of repressed eagerness.

"With pleasure."

She handed him her card. Having inscribed his name, he hesitated, and said, with a smile of entreaty:

"Dare I ask for the second waltz?"

"Very well," returned Nora, with a little laugh at his imploring tone.

The Gold Dust Twins' Philosophy

IF you have ever fumed and fussed, because of dirt and grime and rust, and said unto yourself, "Oh, dear! This household work will kill, I fear"—then it is time that you should find some other method far more kind.

Of all the woes a housewife bears, one always fills her day with cares: The kitchen after-meal-time muss, is quite enough to make one fuss. What, with the pots and pails and pans, the knives and forks and plates and cans, no task of man, however grim, the half as mean is handed him.

The Easiest Way

Two little willing workers aim to enter in this household game: their job, the lessening of work, a task that neither of them shirk. With active little hands and brains they grab the irksome household reins, till soon each kettle, pot or dish, is just as bright as you could wish. And not until the chores

yes—to be sure," with a

of surprise and admiration as they entered the hall of Evesleigh Manor House on the night of the ball.

It was large and oblong, occupying the height of two stories, with a double staircase at the back, curving gently to an arch, beneath which a door led to the rooms in the rear of the mansion. A gallery of carved oak surrounded it on three sides. Below were the reception and breakfast rooms, while the library, morning and billiard-rooms were in the wings.
This hall was exquisitely decorated and brilliantly lighted. Figures in armor held lamps, banks of flowers filled in the bend of the staircase at either side, the door-way beneath, which was handsomely draped, showed the softly lighted passage beyond, leading, between ferns and palms, to the refreshment-room.
Flowers wreathed the gallery, and groups of banners hung in the angles. Sofas and chairs stood in various positions, with Persian rugs, bear and tiger skins, lying before them on the highly polished oaken floor.

The ladies of Brookdale came early, they wished to see the rooms before the crowd assembled.

"Lady Dorrington is in the white drawing-room," said the butler, opening the first door on the left.

This was the smaller of the two drawing-rooms, and was as bright and beautiful as lights, flowers and groups of plants could make it.

Lady Dorrington, in velvet and diamonds, stood in the centre, with nearly all the house party, re-enforced by several gentlemen Nora had not seen before, gathered round her.

Directly the butler announced
"Mrs. and Miss L'Estrange," Marsden came forward, shook hands very cordially with Mrs. L'Estrange, and let her pass on to Lady Dorrington;
then stopping Nora, to whom he showed a programme, said: "I have put down my name for waltz number eight," pointing out the word "Clifford," written in ink against that number, "you can not alter it, you see."

"I shall not want to alter it," returned Nora, looking up with a smile. "I fancy you are the best dancer here."

She was struck with the expression of his eyes. They were fiercely bright, and had a certain indescribable look of intense resolution, while his face was white, and the veins in his forehead showed distinctly; otherwise he was strikingly handsome and distinguished. Evening dress suited him well.

"Mrs. and Miss Saunders, Captain Lethbridge, Mr. Winton," were announced in rapid succession. Lady Dorrington went forward to receive them.

"My severe duties are about to commence," said Marsden, who still held the programme, which he now put into Nora's hand, managing to catch and press it as he did so. "I look to you for my reward by and by."

"I wonder," thought Nora, looking after him as he went to greet his guests, "if the squire is ever in earnest?"

Her conjectures were interrupted by the appearance of Mrs. Ruthven, who came in from the room beyond. She looked radiant and fairy-like in soft satin and delicate lace, and absolutely ablaze with jewels. Diamond stars studded the firmament of her golden-red hair; a collar of superb rubies, set with brilliants, encircled her neck, and, in the estimation of some, seemed too overpowering for her small figure. Diamond and ruby butterflies glittered on her shoulders, where they caught up her scanty lace
sleeves, and bracelets of rare gems

CHAMBERLAIN'S TABLETS

A Progressive Farmer's Opinion of Good Roads

MR. JOE CLARK, who lives on an improved road in Lauderdale County, Mississippi, makes the following convincing statement:

"I live four miles from the city and two miles from the school. This has been the worst winter I have ever seen, but there hasn't been a single day that my children haven't walked to school, and not a single day have they come home with wet feet, and to think, they walked down the middle of the road. Not one of them has been sick with a cold even, while heretofore my doctor bills have been more than my road tax. Talk to me about paying taxes to build roads. I am willing to pay taxes on my pack of fox hounds, my bird dogs, my chickens, my horses, and, if necessary, my wife and children, if they will use it in extending roads like this all over the country. I would rather have my house and ten acres of land on this road like it is now than have my whole farm on the old road like it was before improvement."

A Concrete Road

is the most satisfactory and economical road that can be built. It requires practically no expenditure for upkeep, and enables road taxes to be invested in more good roads instead of being spent in filling mud holes and ruts. It is permanent, safe, clean and passable the year 'round.

The Wise Cook Will Make Liberal Use of Them at This Season of the Year and Cut Down the Daily Allowance of Fresh Meat.

Early greens are in the market, and people who have the "spring medicine" habit may readily transfer their allegiance from the medicine bottle to dandelion greens, rhubarb, sorrel, etc.

One of the best of all spring tonics—that is to say, one of the best things for arousing a torpid liver—is the lemon. The juice may be taken in drinks with a little or no sweetening, or lemons may be baked and the pulp eaten. Orange and grape fruit juice are also excellent tonic foods, the latter being said to be invaluable for fever.

But of all the early season's foods the dandelion probably ranks first as a spring tonic. This is full of needed salts and bitters for the excitation of the torpid liver. It may be either boiled or steamed in the form of greens. It may be served with vinegar or with a white sauce, garnished with egg, or it may be served with a French dressing as a salad.

Next to the dandelion in tonic properties comes rhubarb. This contains an acid said to be an excellent "moderator." Rhubarb can be cooked in various ways.

Spinach is a green obtainable now throughout the year and preferred by many people to any other form of boiled greens. Early onions, watercress, romaine, chives and endive are also excellent things to partake generously of in the early months of spring. Radishes are not to be neglected, while lettuce and celery might well appear once a day on everybody's table.

The turnip and parsnip contain a peculiar oily principle which may account for their traditional value as an aperient and diuretic, while their juices are an old country remedy for coughs and hoarseness. The presence of starch and sugar would hardly account for these properties.

The potato, of course, possesses a cited nutritive value, but it also contains elements, among which is sodium, that are credited with diuretic properties.

The common cabbage is redolent with a sulphur compound which may possibly account for the value attached to it in scurvy and scrofula.

Spinach is a well known laxative property, however, which may be ascribed to the fine indigestible fibre which characterizes it. There is present also a peculiar principle as well as a quantity of iron in organic form.

The tomato exercises medicinal effects which are not completely explained the presence of alkaline salts. There is a principle present which when taken in a concentrated state produces salivation and a free stimulation of the liver. On this account the tomato has been called vegetable mercury.

Carrots have a similar action, forming a considerable part of the menu at certain health resorts in the belief that they materially assist in the treatment of derangements of the liver and of the biliary processes generally. The vegetable contains a definite principle, carotin and a volatile oil, which may possess properties that have supplied the traditional curative qualities.

The Boston Cooking School Magazine suggests the following ways of cooking spinach:

To prepare a spinach salad chop exceedingly fine enough cooked spinach to make a cupful and a quarter, a one-fourth of a teaspoonful each salt and paprika, a tablespoonful olive oil and half a teaspoonful lemon juice. Soften one-fourth of package of gelatin in one-fourth of a cupful of chicken broth or water and dissolve in one-fourth a cupful of boiling broth. Stir the dissolved gelatin in the spinach. Have ready six or eight timbale molds, fitted with rounds of paper in the bottom. Set a slice "hard cooked" egg in the bottom, each mold and figures cut from thin slices of white against the sides; then fill with spinach. When cold unmold on thin shreds of cold cooked tongue. Garnish with heart leaves of lettuce. Serve sauce tartare in a bowl.

To serve spinach in the Italian style cook half a peck of carefully washed spinach in the usual manner, drain and chop fine. Melt one tablespoonful butter, add one tablespoonful of flour and half a teaspoonful or less of salt and stir until blended, add half a cupful of rich milk or thin cream and stir until boiling, add the spinach and from half to a full cupful of grated cheese and stir until the cheese is melted in the whole very hot. Turn on to a hot dish; garnish with slices of hard cooked eggs and lemon.

MAY RILMA, GREAT BUTTER PRODUCER

May Rilma, 22761, queen of the dairy world, was dropped Dec. 15, 1906, and is therefore in her eighth year. She was sired by Mars of Woodcrest, and her dam was Rilma of Paxtang.

May Rilma is American bred. When first entered for advanced registry under the rules of the American Guernsey Cattle club she produced in twelve months 12,145.6 pounds of milk, the test showing 580.07 pounds of butter fat. This led to her re-entry for the test just completed.

Profit in the careful treatment of May Rilma is shown by the following figures compiled by Mr. Cassatt:

May Rilma furnished 19,639.5 pounds of milk during 365 days of the test.

The Guernsey cow, May Rilma, owned by Captain Edward B. Cassatt, proprietor of the famous Ches- terbrook farm at Berwyn, Pa., has given in 365 days 19,639.5 pounds of milk, which contained 1,069.56 pounds of butter fat. This cow was bred and raised at the farm, and her year's work has been carefully supervised under the regulations for the advanced register of Guernsey cattle conducted by the American Guernsey Cattle club. While officially supervised by the representa- tives of the Pennsylvania experi- ment station, her work has also been checked by six similar institu- tions in other states and by a rep- resentative of the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture. This record surpasses that of any cow of all the dairy breeds in the world.

This was sold at 6 cents a pound, so the cow brought in $1,178.37.

The daily feed of the cow was eight- een pounds of mixed grain ration, three pounds of beet pulp, three pounds of molasses, thirty pounds of ensilage and ten pounds of hay.

This sixty-four pounds of feed per day cost $.6935, a total of $253.31 for 365 days. During ninety-seven days of the test May Rilma was fed some carrots, the cost being altogether $15.52. So the cost of feeding the cow was $270.83.

CARE OF RUNTY PIGS.

Animals May Do Fairly Well if Care- fully Looked After.

The hog man, no matter how careful he may be, always finds a few runty pigs on his hands when the time comes for weaning the litters in the early summer, says the Kansas Farmer. The number will depend to some extent upon the condition of the breeding herd, but perhaps more largely upon the care the sows and pigs have received during the suckling period. Every good hog man dislikes to see these runty pigs running around among the other pigs, and even though they are few in number they always seem more prominent than the good pigs of the litters.

The pig which is runty at weaning time will likely remain runty through the season unless he is given some extra care and attention. These pigs should by all means be culled out from the rest of the bunch and placed in a pasture or lot by themselves. They can then be given a little better feed and care and may possibly develop into fairly decent pigs. The rest of the bunch will look better at any rate, and this is no small matter to the breeder of pure bred hogs who oftentimes wishes to show visitors his stock. Giving the runts a little better chance will push them along so that they oftentimes can be disposed of on the market early and thus be out of the way.

Hog Pasture Question.

Experiments at the Iowa station indicate that rye furnishes very good hog pasture, but that the vetch is not worth much. For some reason the hogs do not seem to take to it. Oats and Canada field peas furnish very good hog pasture, but everything considered, rape alone is by far the best of all the annual hog pasture plants. Iowa experiments indicate conclusively that it is not worth while to use cowpeas, sorghum or soy beans as hog pasture when such a good plant as rape is available. Rape seeded in the spring and properly pastured will furnish good forage for hogs during June, July, August, September, October and part of November.

Drying Off the Sow.

Good judgment will have to be used in handling the sows after the pigs get to be seven or eight weeks old, and it is a sensible thing to cut down after that time on the milk making part of the ration. In other words, feed corn a little heavier and cut down the concentrates. This will tend to automati- cally wean the pigs and incidentally it will keep the sows in better condition than if they are forced along with a heavy milk making ration.

Guard Against Blemishes.

A big scar in a prominent place on the body of a horse will take a good many dollars off his market price. For that reason do your best to guard against all such things.

Mystified.

DROWNED IN THE RIVER.

On Wednesday evening William Mills, fireman on the Steamer Lamonde, lost his life while swimming near the boat. The lad had been in the water some little time and though not a good swimmer was apparently doing all right. One of the other swimmers who were bathing at the same time had a rope on Mills for a few minutes and he seemed so well able to take care of himself that it was supposed he was playing a joke in asking anyone to hold a rope on him. However a few minutes afterwards he must have taken a cramp or got excited and sank. The body was found in a very short time and doctors worked over him for almost an hour but without success. Mills' former home is in Cobourg where he is supposed to have an aunt living but up to date no relatives have been found and the remains will likely be buried here. Anyone knowing of relatives of this lad will confer a favor by communicating with J. J. Graham, Chief of Police, Napanee.

Married at Ottawa.

A quiet and pretty wedding took place in St. John's Anglican church, Ottawa, on June 2nd last when Miss Annie Greaves Hooper, second daughter of the late Rev. J. G. Hooper and Mrs. Hooper, became the bride of Albert Henry Augustus Zapf, of Cleveland, Ohio. The wedding service was performed by the rector, Rev. Mr. Morman, in the presence of the immediate relatives of the bride and groom, who were unattended, and a few intimate friends of the bride's family. The bride, who was given away by her brother, Mrs. W. G. Hooper, looked radiant and charming and wore a handsome costume of grey moire with hat to match, veiled in grey chiffon and trimmed with pink and white roses. She wore a corsage byquet of beauty roses and maiden hair fern. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother, 166 Gladstone Ave., where the parlors were prettily decorated with pink roses, carnations and lilies of the valley. The dining-room was decorated with pink tulips and white lilies. Dainty refreshments were served and after congratulations the bride and groom left on the afternoon train for Montreal whence they returned west to their future home in Cleveland, visiting Ontario towns and cities enroute.
